Neuroscientists and those in middle age or beyond know that brains alter and slow as we grow older. Processing speed, which is a measure of how rapidly our brains can absorb, assess and respond to new information, seems to be particularly hard hit. Most people who are older than about 40 perform worse on tests of processing speed than those who are younger, with the effects accelerating as the decades pass.

- (A) But in older people, brain scans show, the white matter can be skimpier and less efficient. Messages stutter and slow.
- (B) Scientists suspect that this decline is due in large part to a concomitant fraying of our brain's white matter, which is its wiring.
- (C) In young brains, these messages whip from neuron to neuron with boggling speed.
- (D) White matter consists of specialized cells and their offshoots that pass messages between neurons and from one part of the brain to another.

The French philosopher, Rene Descartes, wrote, "The reading of all good books is like a conversation with all the finest men of past centuries." American humorist Will Rogers observed, "A man only learns in two ways, one by reading, and the other by association with smarter people." People have always appreciated the educational value of reading, but recent research also suggests that reading habits can have an effect on our wallets as well. One study found that children and adolescents who had strong reading habits were more likely to be successful as adults. Another study found that people from low-income backgrounds who liked to read as children and adolescents were more likely to increase their financial and social position when they became adults than those who did not. According to a United States government survey on reading in 2002, levels of income correlated very strongly with reading habits: people who read a lot tended to have higher incomes than people who did not read often. The American Success Institute lists reading as a key component in 'mastering life,' their tenth principle of success.

Liberalism includes a broad spectrum of political philosophies that consider individual liberty to be the most important political goal, and emphasize individual rights and equality of opportunity. (1) Although most Liberals would claim that a government is necessary to protect rights, different forms of Liberalism may propose very different policies. 2) They are, however, generally united by their support for a number of principles, including extensive freedom of thought and freedom of speech, limitations on the power of governments, the application of the rule of law, a market economy and a transparent and democratic system of government. 3 Like the similar concept of Libertarianism, Liberalism believes that society should be organized in accordance with certain unchangeable and inviolable human rights, especially the rights to life, liberty and property. 4 Nonetheless, the Liberal Party of Canada, colloquially known as the Grits, is the oldest federal political party in the country. It also holds that traditions do not carry any inherent value, and that social practices ought to be continuously adjusted for the greater benefit of humanity.

The intrinsic value of the biosphere is not rejected but is integrated with a recognition that man makes up part of the universe and cannot exist without conservation of the biosphere and the ecosystems which comprise it. In this perspective all sectors of the environment have a value not only in their short-term utility to humans, as the earlier exclusively anthropocentric approach would have it, but also as indispensable elements of an interrelated system which must be protected to ensure human survival. While this ultimate aim of human survival remains anthropocentric, humans are not viewed as apart from or above the natural universe, but as an interlinked and interdependent part of it. It follows that because all parts of the natural web are linked, they

- ① must each be protected and conserved
- 2 cannot exist without human survival
- 3 support the exclusively anthropocentric view
- 4 may be devoid of the intrinsic value

The first grain elevator was built by Joseph Dart in 1842. Before that, grain was loaded and unloaded by hand, a back-breaking job that took several days. The elevator consisted of a large wooden structure that served as a storage bin for the grain. The elevator allowed ships to be unloaded at a rate of over 35,000 liters per hour, leading to ships docking, unloading, and departing all within the same day. The elevator was an ideal store for grain as it was cool, dry, and free of pests that could endanger the crop. The only risk was from fire in the wooden elevator since grain dust is highly flammable. Despite being the first person to actually build one, Joseph Dart claimed not to be the inventor of the elevator, saying instead that he had based his designs entirely on those of Oliver Evans.

- ① Joseph Dart designed the first grain elevator from scratch.
- ② The first grain elevator was cool, dry, and prone to fire.
- 3 Joseph Dart made the first grain elevator in the nineteenth century
- 4) The first grain elevator had a large storage bin for grain.

Crazy Horse was one of the most famous of all Native American leaders. His exploits and brave resistance to white settlers opening up the homelands have become legendary. Tasunkewitko, to give him his true name, was a chief of the Oglala tribe of the Sioux nation. He defiantly repelled incursions by the 'white man' into Sioux territory in the northern Great Plains, from about 1865 until his death in 1877. His courage has ensured him a permanent place in western sagas. Early skirmishes included resisting government plans to build a road to access the goldfields of Montana in 1865. Then in Wyoming he was involved in the massacre of a troop of 80 men commanded by Captain William J. Fetterman in 1866, and the Wagon Box Fight of 1867. In an attempt to defuse such conflicts, reservations were set up for the local tribes under the Second Treaty of Fort Laramie in 1868, but Crazy Horse continued to lead hunting expeditions outside these limits.

- ② Crazy Horse attempted to defuse conflicts brought about by the Second Treaty of Fort Laramie.
- ③ Crazy Horse played a role in the killing of Captain Fetterman's soldiers.

In England, even as the agents of the East India Company grew rich importing cotton, the English wool industry raised a hue and cry over the impact of cotton on the domestic economy. The problem from the perspective of the wool industry was simple: clothing made of Indian cotton was more comfortable and attractive to Britain's expanding 'middling sort' in the seventeenth century than were most woolens. The East India Company shipped ever-increasing amounts of cotton back to Britain, making its shareholders and the new clothiers who worked in cotton very wealthy. The wool industry, however, suffered as more and more people embraced the new fabric for their daily needs. Several times during the seventeenth century powerful interest groups interceded before parliament and the monarch, demanding, and often getting, stiff import duties on Indian cotton in an effort to buoy the wool trade. The most amusing manifestation of the legal attempt to shore up woolens was when parliament passed a bill in 1678 mandating that corpses had to be wrapped in wool when they were buried in a Church of England funeral. Another somewhat bizarre incident was the official legal requirement that Scottish kilts be woven from thirteen yards of wool. Overnight, every Scot serving in the military had to be clothed in a huge swath of wool.
