1. 잍줄 친 these organs가 가리키는 것으로 가장 적절한 것은?

At about 2,000 feet, the ocean is completely black. yet in these dark depths, fish live. It is pretty amazing to imagine that life can exist in water that deep and dark. These animals are grotesque, with huge mouths and strange shapes. What might be even more amazing is that these creatures emit light. In fact, over half the fish that live below 2,000 feet have organs called photophores. Fish who have these organs do not give off light all the time. They flash their lights at other fish. They will also flash their lights when they bump into something. But the lights are not meant to help the fish see.

Abstract

Mr. Schwarzenegger also steps into the political ring with virtually none of the preparation of Mr . Reagan. When Mr. Reagan ran for governor in 1966, he had not only been a well-known actor, the host of a popular Sunday television show and a dashing figure around Los Angeles, but a visible Republican activist across the country. Mr. Reagan's entry into elective politics was a foregone conclusion after the defeat of the Republican presidential nominee Barry M. Goldwater in 1964. Mr. Schwarzenegger, $\qquad$ , arrives on the Republican scene as a virtual outsider. He doesn't have a group of people who two years before the election, as in Reagan's case, were going to do everything they could to advance him.

Japan's NHK TV showed its keen interest in an English program in South Korea, airing a 17-minute report on "English Language Village" a special language zone, set up by Gyeonggi Province. NHK TV aired the program during night time last week, detailing how Gyeonggi Province operates the "English-only zone." The program came only a month after the Japanese media company dealt with it in its morning show "Good Morning Nippon." NHK's keen interest in English Language Village reflects the ongoing efforts in Japan to include English as a mandatory subject in elementary schools' curriculum starting in 2007.

I have seldom met a businessman who was not persuaded that inflation is produced by rising wages and rising wages, $\qquad$ , by strong labor unions - and many a nonbusinessman is of the same mind. This belief is false yet entirely understandable. To each businessman separately, inflation comes in the form of higher costs, mostly wages; yet for all businessmen combined, higher prices produce the higher costs. What is involved is a fallacy of composition. Any one person may be able to leave a crowded theater in two minutes without difficulty. Let everyone try to leave in two minutes and there may be utter chaos. What is true for each separately need not be true for all together.

Western civilization took centuries to develop the idea of child hood. But television had erased it in a few decades. What a child once learned through reading roughly matched with his ability to process the information. In the television age, however, we all get the same messages. A child of five and an adult of 40 can see the same images and hear the same words simply by pushing a button. It shows in our behavior. Children and adults now dress alike, talk alike and play the same games. The concept of childhood is $\qquad$ _.
