문 11. 글의 내용과 일치하는 것은?

Sleeping is such a natural thing to do. We spend perhaps a third of our lives doing it. Why, then, do people have trouble sleeping? Often we can't sleep because something exciting is about to happen—a special party or a championship game, for example. Other times we can't sleep because we are nervous or upset. What can we do if we have trouble sleeping? One suggestion is to set up a sleep schedule. Whenever possible, try to get to bed about the same time each night. Also, try to get the right number of hours of sleep for you. Some people may need only six or seven hours of sleep a night. Others may need nine or ten. Seven or eight hours a night is the average.

Arnold Bennett once pointed out that we all have the same amount of time—twenty-four hours a day. Strictly speaking, that's as inconclusive an observation as Bennett ever made. It's not the time that (A) counts, but energy—and of that wonderful quality we all have very different amounts.

Energy comes from a healthy body, of course; it also comes from a psychological balance, a lack of conflicts and insecurities.

And (B) this man apparently has boundless energy—he's on the go from morning to night, and often far into the night, working hard, never tiring, never "pooped"—and getting twice as much done as any three other people.
