Some experts think bullying _____. For our ancestors, they argue, being able to control others was a useful strategy for survival. By acting tough, some people would earn a higher rank than others. These leaders would take responsibility for the group. Everyone else would respect the leaders and do as they were told. When each member of the group knew where he or she belonged, society would run smoothly. Monkeys and apes, humans' closest relatives, still organize their societies this way. But for modern people, the behavior can backfire. Teenage bullies don't take care of their classmates, like top-ranked apes do. Instead, their meanness simply causes trouble.

When most people are asked to suggest a future power source, they think of solar energy. After all, the sun is a huge furnace, sunlight is free and it doesn't pollute the air. It's also a renewable energy source, which means that it will never run out. But there are some problems. First of all, the sun does not shine all the time, so backup systems are needed, and changing solar energy to electricity is too expensive for normal use. So are plates needed to collect solar energy. For these reasons, _____ solar power will ever become our primary energy source.

- ① it is certain that ② it seems that
③ it is believed that ④ it is unlikely that

15. Tornadoes에 관한 다음 글의 내용과 일치하지 않는 것은?

Tornadoes are storms with very strong turning winds and dark clouds. They reach speeds of 300 miles per hour. The dark clouds are shaped like a funnel - wide at the top and narrow at the bottom. The winds are strongest in the center of the funnel. A hot afternoon in the spring is the most likely time for a tornado. A cloud forms a funnel and begins to twist. The funnel moves faster and faster. The faster the winds, the louder the noise. Tornadoes always move in a northeastern direction. They never last longer than eight hours.

In the age of a new generation of digital natives, what are the older generations doing to learn about the online world? The oldest of the American baby boomers (the generation born between 1946 and 1964) learned how to use new media at work. But for the generation born before 1946, getting used to computers and the internet has been a bigger challenge. Several cities across the country have started to offer new programs for senior citizens to teach them web skills. "At first, I wasn't sure if I would like it. But now I understand my grandchildren when they talk about what they do every day," says Agnes Stein, 78-year-old student at the Wayne Senior Center. The number of seniors online is definitely increasing. In 2005, only five percent of senior citizens had internet access, but as of 2009, the number had gone up to 30 percent. In fact, some seniors have become famous around the world for their use of the internet. The world's oldest person on Facebook, Ivy Bean, joined the site in 2008 when she was 102 years old.

- ① Seniors are going digital
- ② New generation, new technology
- ③ Who is the oldest internet user?
- ④ Baby boomers connecting to social network services

Some individuals decide to become police officers when they are very young, while others come to the realization later. Either way, there are numbers of steps to be taken if someone wants to become a police officer, and the earlier you get started, the better. A career in public service can be diverse, challenging, and fulfilling for those who are able to make it through the highly competitive process. Opportunities in law enforcement are incredibly varied, from urban police to rural sheriffs. If someone wants to become a police officer, he or she should start with education. Police departments require a basic high school education, and additional training such as an Associates or Bachelors degree is recommended. A number of colleges offer criminal justice programs for individuals interested in becoming a police officer. Most of these programs involve education in human behavior, legal issues, computer systems, and a variety of other subjects which assist law enforcement officers. The more advanced your training, the more successful your application as a police officer will be. This training will also serve you well in the field.

Cancer is a physical, mental, and emotional stress on the body. Meditation for cancer can benefit the cancer patient by somewhat reducing all of these stresses. Physically, meditation can help alleviate some of the discomforts of cancer and the side effects of treatment. Mentally and emotionally, meditation for cancer helps to build or maintain a positive attitude and reduce stress. Many forms of meditation have been found to benefit cancer patients. One of the physical benefits of meditation for cancer is to boost the immune system, which is often damaged by anti-cancer drugs and the stress of having cancer. Many cancer patients report issues with insomnia, caused either by the drugs they are taking or the stress of being sick. Meditation has been shown to be an effective tool in combating insomnia by calming and relaxing the patient. The pain associated with having cancer and the cancer treatments themselves are somewhat a by meditation. Lower doses of pain killers, delaying the use of pain killers until treatment is further along, or a reduced need for medications to relieve the side effects of treatment is often possible when cancer patients practice meditation.
